

Writing Tuesday Harder

Most of the punctuation has been removed from this extract. Can you rewrite and correct the punctuation in the following paragraphs?

Varjak woke from his dream in the alley it was night time again he and Holly had slept through the day a street light buzzed on and off behind him a full moon round and white as a saucer of milk shone comfortingly up above but it was quickly smothered by street-black clouds

He needed to go to the litter tray Holly was fast asleep and they were still on Sally Bones' territory well it was outside wasn't it the whole world was his litter tray he could go wherever he pleased

He slouched out of the shadows and did his business by a heap of rubbish what a relief it was.